TPs – What is Graffiti Art?

Graffiti is defined as writing or drawing that is scribbled, sprayed or scratched on a wall or other public space.

There is evidence of wall drawings dating back thousands of years but modern graffiti started in the 1960s, in America.

Creating this type of street art without permission is against the law and some people see it as a nuisance. However, others view it as an expressive art form and some countries have designated sites where graffiti artists may display their work.

History of Graffiti

The first wall drawings appeared in caves thousands of years ago.

Modern graffiti started in the United States in the 1960s. By the late 1960s, it had reached New York. This new art form became very popular throughout the 1970s when artists began tagging buildings.

Soon after, underground trains could be seen covered in spray paint and became a popular place for 'taggers' to write.

A tag is the most basic type of graffiti - it's the artist's signature. It's usually written in spray paint or marker pen.
